THE INFLUENCER'S LAST POST

She built her life online. He's about to take it apart.

FEATURE FILM | THRILLER | 100 PAGES | GREEN V2 | TARGET: BET+

LOGLINE

When Atlanta influencer Taylor Monroe is framed for her best friend's staged suicide, she must expose the tech mogul running an AI behavioral-mimicry system — before he uses her own digital identity to silence her permanently.

SYNOPSIS

Taylor Monroe has 2.3 million followers and a brand deal that could change her life. Then her best friend Nina disappears from an Atlanta bridge — and the internet decides Taylor is responsible.

As Nina's curated ghost continues posting from beyond the bridge — same captions, same cadence, same light — Taylor realizes the truth is worse than grief. Nina is alive, hiding from tech entrepreneur Derek Mason, whose Project Echo AI can clone anyone's digital identity so perfectly that even the people who love you can't tell the difference.

With the FBI closing in, Derek's fabricated evidence mounting, and her own followers turning on her, Taylor races to expose a conspiracy that lives inside the platforms she built her life on. The only way out is to use the one thing Derek can't replicate: the intimate, analog knowledge of who Nina actually is.

COMPS BY ATTRIBUTE

Acrimony (Lionsgate / BET-adjacent)
Black female protagonist, betrayal, emotional escalation

A Fall From Grace (Netflix)
Atlanta thriller, twist reveal, mass audience engagement

Searching (Sony)
Social media as narrative canvas, digital investigation

The Girl on the Train (Universal)
Framed female protagonist, shifting POV, thriller mechanics

THEMES

- Digital identity vs. authentic self
- The weaponization of a woman's public persona
- Trust, surveillance, and the cost of oversharing
- Female friendship as the story's true engine
- Black Atlanta ambition in the creator economy

WHY BET+

A Black female protagonist who is not the cautionary tale, not the victim — the detective. The conspiracy lives inside platforms created to empower Black creators and turned against one. Atlanta's digital entrepreneurship culture is the world, not the backdrop. This is a BET+ premium thriller with franchise DNA: the technology, the stakes, and the emotional engine all live beyond one film.

Written by K.R. Tenney | NCCA Entertainment | contact@nccaentertainment.com | Copyright © 2025 NCCA Entertainment Inc. | All Rights Reserved

CAST SUGGESTIONS

THE INFLUENCER'S LAST POST — Target: BET+ — Feature Film — Green V2

TAYLOR MONROE

Lead. Black woman, late 20s–early 30s. Atlanta-bred, digitally native, sharp instincts masked by brand training. The audience's surrogate — has to carry terror, wit, and grief simultaneously.

SUGGESTED TALENT

Keke Palmer
Real-life social media force. Audiences believe her as an influencer before the scene starts. Proven dramatic range (Nope, Strahan Sara & Keke). BET+ audience knows and loves her. TOP CHOICE.

Dominique Fishback
Critical darling (Transformers: Rise of the Beasts, The Swarm). Younger-skewing, emotionally raw. Would bring indie credibility to a commercial thriller.

Meagan Good
Established BET/thriller lane (Shazam!, Think Like a Man). Deep audience trust. A strong dramatic anchor who plays scared without losing authority.

NINA BAPTISTE

Taylor's best friend. A planner, not a performer. Appears in video messages and the final act. Must make the audience forgive her for the chaos she caused — warmth, intelligence, retroactive sympathy.

SUGGESTED TALENT

Antoinette Robertson
Dear White People. Quiet intensity, cerebral energy. The audience will believe Taylor loved her completely from the first video message.

DeWanda Wise
Someone Great, Jurassic World Dominion. Genuine emotional range. Strong enough to own a final-act reveal after two acts of absence.

Logan Browning
Dear White People. BET audience recognition. Proven dramatic chops. A familiar face that rewards the audience when Nina resurfaces.

DEREK MASON

Antagonist. Tech entrepreneur, 35–45. Charming, controlled, never louder than he needs to be. His menace is in his stillness — the villain who always sounds reasonable.

SUGGESTED TALENT

Omari Hardwick
Power (BET audience knows him cold). The switch from ally to threat is exactly his register. Has the stillness Derek requires. Strong casting signal for BET+.

Morris Chestnut
The Best Man, V Wars. Established thriller presence. Audience trust makes his turn more devastating — you don't want it to be him, so it is.

Laz Alonso
The Boys proved his dramatic range. Underused in the BET+ lane. A smart get who elevates the project's critical profile.

MARCUS WEBB

Ally / love interest. Former cybercrime investigator. The grounding force. Needs authority to be credible and warmth not to be furniture.

SUGGESTED TALENT

Algee Smith
The Hate U Give, Euphoria. Strong dramatic range. Would play against type in an investigative role — the surprise is part of the casting value.

Sinqua Walls
How I Met Your Father, Barbershop: The Next Cut. Natural warmth with physicality. Proven in ensemble work, ready for a lead-adjacent role.

Kendrick Sampson
Insecure, How to Get Away with Murder. BET-adjacent audience familiarity. Strong leading-man energy that doesn't compete with the female leads.

BIANCA COLE

Nina's college friend. The reluctant insider. Helped Derek not out of malice but out of manufactured fear. Must be sympathetic even when complicit — the moral complexity lives in this role.

SUGGESTED TALENT

Nafessa Williams
Black Lightning, Twin Peaks: The Return. Can hold ambiguity. The audience spends two acts unsure if she is villain or victim — she needs to sustain both readings simultaneously.

Simone Missick
Luke Cage, All Rise. Authority and vulnerability in equal measure. Can play the tech-smart backstory convincingly. Strong second-act anchor.

Essence Atkins
Half & Half, Are We Done Yet? BET audience recognition. Casting her signals trust to the audience — which makes the reveal land harder.

Written by K.R. Tenney | NCCA Entertainment | contact@nccaentertainment.com | Copyright © 2025 NCCA Entertainment Inc. | All Rights Reserved