

sometimes you need a second look to find your first love

SECOND FIRST DATE

SECOND FIRST DATE

Genre: Romantic Comedy

Setting: Atlanta, GA

Target Audience: 20–40s, fans of second-chance romances, witty banter, and feel-good chemistry stories.

LOGLINE:

When a dating app matches two former college sweethearts, who once vowed never to speak again, they reluctantly agree to three dates as a dare. But as sparks reignite, they'll have to confront whether their love story ended too soon... or if some things are better left in the past.

SYNOPSIS:

Ava Campbell, a wildly successful but emotionally cautious tech entrepreneur, prides herself on efficiency, especially when it comes to dating. No mess, no drama, no repeats. Meanwhile, Daniel Brooks, a vintage record store owner with a love for slow living, has stayed in the same Atlanta neighborhood for years, spinning vinyl and nursing the heartbreak Ava left behind.

When a new "soul match" feature on the popular app Spark (Ava's rival startup) matches them together, they're stunned. Even more shocking? Their friends egg them into accepting a "three-date challenge", three outings, no ghosting allowed.

Each date becomes a collision of past and present:

- A high-end tech launch party where Ava thrives and Daniel sticks out like a sore thumb.
- A cozy open-mic night at a dive bar where Daniel shines and Ava freezes.
- A spontaneous afternoon lost in Little Five Points, where walls finally crumble.

As old wounds and new laughter surface, Ava and Daniel must ask: were they just wrong for each other back then, or did they meet too early to appreciate the right love?

TONE:

Playful, flirty, heartfelt. A mix of Always Be My Maybe and Sweet Home Alabama, but grounded in the fast-moving vs. slow-living contrast of modern Atlanta.

KEY THEMES:

- Timing is everything.
- Second chances can be better than first impressions.
- Learning to slow down, or speed up, for the right person.