

A PSYCHOLOGICAL THRILLER

THE OTHER MRS. JAMESON

THE OTHER MRS. JAMESON

A Psychological Thriller About Love, Lies, and the Woman You Never Saw Coming

FORMAT

Genre: Domestic Thriller / Mystery

Format: Original Movie (85–90 minutes)

Target Networks: Lifetime | BET+ | OWN | VH1 Movies

Tone: Tense, seductive, emotionally charged

Setting: Atlanta — Cascade Heights, Downtown, and boutique luxury spaces

Audience: Women 25–54 who crave relationship thrillers with social bite

LOGLINE

A newlywed's picture-perfect life unravels when a mysterious woman shows up claiming to be her husband's legal wife. But the deeper she digs into her husband's past, the more she realizes: one of them is lying... and the other might not live to tell the truth.

THE HOOK

One man. Two wives. Three lives on the verge of unraveling.

This is a suspense-driven story of identity, manipulation, and the dark side of love. The Other Mrs. Jameson delivers sharp psychological twists, emotional stakes, and a final act that flips the domestic thriller formula on its head.

Think: Obsessed meets Gone Girl, with a Southern twist and a Black female lead.

STORY OVERVIEW

ACT ONE: THE PERFECT LIFE... INTERRUPTED

Ayana Jameson has it all figured out. After years of toxic relationships and heartbreak, she's finally living the life she deserves: a stunning home in Atlanta's prestigious Cascade Heights, a thriving PR career managing image and crisis for Atlanta's elite, and a husband who seems too good to be true.

Dorian Jameson is smooth, successful, and maddeningly attentive. He remembers her coffee order. He leaves handwritten notes on the bathroom mirror. He makes her feel seen in ways no man ever has. Six months into their whirlwind marriage, Ayana is glowing, posting couple pics, planning dinner parties, living in the kind of Black love fantasy that breaks the internet.

Until the day Nia Thorne shows up at her door.

Nia is polished, confident, and unflinching. She's not hysterical. She's not unhinged. She's calm as she sits across from Ayana in her own living room and says the words that shatter everything:

"I'm Mrs. Jameson. The real one."

She has a marriage certificate. Photos from a wedding in Jamaica. Bank statements with Dorian's name. A timeline that overlaps with Ayana's relationship. Nia isn't asking for anything, she's informing her. And then she leaves, as quietly as she came.

Ayana confronts Dorian that night. He laughs it off at first, then gets serious. He tells her Nia is his ex. That she's unstable. That she's been stalking him since he ended things. He pulls Ayana close, looks her in the eyes, and says, "You're my wife. You're the only woman I want."

She wants to believe him. God, she wants to believe him.

But something in his voice doesn't land right.

ACT TWO: THE UNRAVELING

Ayana starts digging. Quietly at first, Google searches, social media deep dives, late-night phone calls to mutual friends who suddenly can't remember meeting Dorian before the wedding. She hires a private investigator who finds... nothing. No criminal record. No red flags. Just a man with a suspiciously clean past.

But Nia keeps appearing. At Ayana's office. At her favorite brunch spot. Never threatening, just present. She leaves a business card with a handwritten note: "When you're ready to know the truth, call me."

Ayana's friends think she's spiraling. Her best friend Lena tells her to let it go, that every successful Black man comes with a crazy ex. But Ayana can't shake the feeling that she's missing something.

Then Nia disappears.

No calls. No sightings. Her apartment is cleaned out. Her phone goes to voicemail. And when Ayana finally breaks down and calls the number on the card, it's disconnected.

That's when the messages start.

Anonymous texts. Photos of Ayana leaving her house. Screenshots of her private Instagram posts. Someone is watching her. Someone who knows her routine. Someone who wants her to know she's being hunted.

Dorian tells her she's paranoid. He suggests therapy. He starts monitoring her phone, her emails, her movements, for her safety, he says. The house that once felt like a sanctuary now feels like a cage. And Ayana realizes with creeping horror that she's trapped in her own life.

She begins to notice things. Dorian's phone face-down on the table. Late-night "work calls" in the garage. A second phone charger in his gym bag. When she checks their joint account, thousands of dollars are missing, transferred to an LLC she's never heard of.

That's when she finds the other women.

ACT THREE: THE PATTERN

Ayana tracks down a woman named Simone, a stunning interior designer who lived in Charlotte three years ago. Simone's story is chillingly familiar: whirlwind romance, lavish gifts, a wedding that happened too fast. Then the isolation. The financial control. The gaslighting. When Simone tried to leave, Dorian destroyed her credit, got her fired from her job, and convinced her family she was having a breakdown.

She barely escaped with her sanity.

There's another woman in Houston. Another in Birmingham. All successful. All Black. All left financially and emotionally wrecked. Dorian doesn't just break hearts, he dismantles lives.

Ayana realizes Nia wasn't lying. She was warning her.

And now Nia is gone.

Panic sets in. Ayana tries to leave, but Dorian has closed their joint accounts. Her car is in his name. The house is his. She's locked in, legally, financially, emotionally. When she threatens to go to the police, Dorian smiles that perfect smile and says, "Go ahead. Tell them your husband's ex-girlfriend is harassing you. See how that plays."

He's three steps ahead. He always has been.

But Ayana is a PR strategist. She knows how to control a narrative. And she's about to flip the script.

ACT FOUR: THE RECKONING

Ayana doesn't run. She plans.

She reconnects with Simone and the other survivors. Together, they build a case, not for the police, but for the public. Ayana sets up a live Instagram broadcast under an anonymous account, scheduled to go live during Dorian's company gala, a black-tie event where Atlanta's power players will be watching.

She stages the confrontation in their home, cameras hidden, audio recording. She asks Dorian point-blank: "Did you marry Nia?"

He denies it. She pulls out the marriage certificate. He calls it fake. She plays a voicemail from Simone. He calls her crazy. She keeps pushing, calm, controlled, relentless, until Dorian finally snaps.

He admits it. All of it. The marriages. The cons. The carefully constructed life built on other women's ruin. He tells Ayana she was supposed to be different, she was supposed to stay.

And that's when she reveals the cameras. The livestream. The thousands of viewers watching in real time.

Dorian lunges. There's a struggle. But Ayana doesn't fight alone, Nia walks through the door, alive, flanked by the other women. They planned this together. Nia was never the threat. She was the ally.

The police arrive. Dorian is arrested. The livestream goes viral. Ayana's name trends. But this time, she controls the story.

FINAL IMAGE

Ayana stands in her new apartment, smaller, but hers. Sunlight pours through the windows. She's on a video call with Nia, Simone, and the others. They're laughing. Planning. Healing.

She's not a victim. She's a survivor. And she's just getting started.

FADE OUT.

KEY CHARACTERS

AYANA JAMESON (32)

Sleek, ambitious, emotionally guarded. A Black female PR executive who has built her career on managing perception but now must confront the reality behind her own curated life. She's not a damsel. She's a strategist who weaponizes her pain into power.

DORIAN JAMESON (40)

Devastatingly handsome, Ivy League-educated, emotionally abusive. A master manipulator who targets successful Black women, seduces them into submission, and systematically destroys their autonomy. Charms everyone but controls everything. Think: a younger, blacker Patrick Bateman in a Tom Ford suit.

NIA THORNE (34)

Confident, beautiful, calculating. Claims to be Dorian's real wife. Her arrival sets off the unraveling, but is she a victim seeking justice or something more dangerous? The answer redefines the entire story.

LENA (30s)

Ayana's best friend and stylist. Sassy, grounded, and fiercely protective. Offers comic relief and emotional grounding, until she gets caught in the crossfire and realizes how deep Dorian's web goes.

VISUAL STYLE & TONE

Sleek. Seductive. Suffocating.

The film opens in luxury, gleaming marble countertops, floor-to-ceiling windows, soft jazz in open-concept living spaces. But as Ayana's world unravels, the cinematography tightens. Wide shots become claustrophobic close-ups. Natural light gives way to harsh shadows. The house that felt like a sanctuary becomes a labyrinth of locked doors and hidden cameras.

Color Palette: Rich jewel tones (emerald, sapphire, burgundy) in Act One shift to cooler blues and grays as paranoia sets in, culminating in stark blacks and whites during the final confrontation.

Sound Design: Ambient tension, creaking floors, distant traffic, the hum of a phone vibrating. Silence used as a weapon. A score that blends sultry neo-soul with dissonant strings.

Camera Work: Creeping dolly shots. Off-center framing. Reflections in mirrors and windows suggesting surveillance and fractured identity.

COMPARABLE TITLES

- Fatal Affair (Netflix) — domestic suspense, Black leads, betrayal
 - Single Black Female (Lifetime) — identity theft, female rivalry twist
 - The Perfect Guy (Sony) — stalker thriller with emotional depth
 - You (Netflix) — psychological manipulation, unreliable narrator
 - Acrimony (Lionsgate) — Tyler Perry's exploration of betrayal and rage
-

CASTING VISION

Ayana:

- Simone Missick (Luke Cage, Raising Dion) — commanding presence, emotional range
- Meagan Good (Shazam!, Harlem) — beauty with bite, proven thriller chops
- Logan Browning (Dear White People) — sophisticated, layered, magnetic

Dorian:

- Michael Ealy (The Perfect Guy, Fatale) — danger in a three-piece suit
- Lance Gross (Tyler Perry's House of Payne) — charm that conceals menace
- Kendrick Sampson (Insecure, How to Get Away with Murder) — youthful sophistication

Nia:

- Bresha Webb (Run the World) — sharp, funny, unpredictable
 - Amber Stevens West (Run the World, Happy Together) — warm exterior, steely core
 - Antoinette Robertson (Dear White People, Ginny & Georgia) — versatile, captivating
-

WHY THIS MOVIE WINS

Built-in Lifetime thriller DNA: Betrayal, gaslighting, domestic suspense with a killer twist

Black female lead with depth: Not a victim, a survivor who weaponizes her intelligence

High-gloss visuals with real psychological tension: Atlanta luxury meets nail-biting paranoia

Perfect for social conversation: Explores love, lies, financial abuse, and survival in the digital age

Strong casting appeal: Ideal for actors looking to dominate the relationship-thriller lane

Built for virality: The livestream climax is designed to spark social media conversation

CREATED BY

Kelly R. Tenney

Writer/Producer known for character-driven suspense and female-led dramas that explore identity, power, and survival. Focused on delivering high-stakes emotional thrillers with cultural resonance and strong genre appeal.