LOGLINE:

When their parents go out of town, three suburban Atlanta teens agree to house-sit for their cool older cousin, only to discover his trendy Cabbagetown loft is the secret hub of his music hustle. What begins as a chill weekend quickly spirals into viral chaos when they're mistaken for producers and must keep up the illusion while protecting rising rap star Lyric from a shady rival looking to steal her shine.

THE HOOK:

A fish-out-of-water, Gen Z house party comedy set against Atlanta's real hip-hop scene. Trap House Sitting flips the genre by centering kids who aren't "about that life" but have to fake it 'til they make it to protect someone else's dream and maybe uncover their own. It's Home Alone with beats, bars, and viral fame.

MAIN CHARACTERS:

- AVA – A rule-following perfectionist who unexpectedly becomes the glue holding the chaos together.
 - ZOE – Her rebellious sister who tries to ride the culture wave without understanding it.
 - MALIK – Their awkward best friend whose livestreams accidentally make them infamous.
 - LYRIC – A sharp, rising rap talent stuck between independence and industry pressure.
 - KING DREZ – A flashy rival producer who wants Lyric's sound and clout for himself.

SETTING:

A Cabbagetown loft turned into a DIY recording studio. Real ATL locations like Grant Park, Stankonia Studios, and underground venues give the film an authentic cultural pulse, blending suburban anxiety with trap aesthetics.

WHY IT SELLS:

With a built-in Gen Z audience obsessed with creator culture, behind-the-scenes fame, and music-first storytelling, Trap House Sitting hits the sweet spot between comedy, social media virality, and real ATL energy. It's easily brand-partnerable (music, fashion, influencers), and ripe for soundtrack and social rollout across platforms.
