

Title: Just Jack

Genre: Action-Comedy / Family Sitcom

Tone: Spy Kids meets Fresh Off the Boat meets Only Murders in the Building

Format: Half-Hour 3-Camera Comedy Series

Target Audience: Ages 10–30; family co-viewing, streamers like Disney+, Netflix

Series Overview:

"Just Jack" follows 14-year-old Jack Roberts, a dramatic, imaginative teen suddenly relocated from the chaos of New York to the "totally normal" city of Philadelphia... or so he's told. His guardian? Uncle Terrence, a stoic, ultra-paranoid former government agent who treats grocery runs like covert ops. Their new home? An old, half-renovated community theater crawling with secrets, ghosts (maybe), and at least one disco ball too many.

Thrown into a new neighborhood, a new school, and a house where literally anything could be haunted or booby-trapped, Jack uses humor, imagination, and performance to survive. With the help of his reluctant cousin Cammie, snack-bringing neighbor Abraham, and his very expressive wardrobe, Jack's antics always seem to stir up trouble, trigger alarms, and occasionally, accidentally summon federal agents.

Pilot Summary: "Just Jack"

Cold Open: Onboard an Amtrak train, Jack and his sharply dressed Uncle Terrence exchange snark and spy banter. Jack suspects Terrence might be CIA. Terrence suspects Jack will get them both arrested. Jack fakes a kidnapping to a sweet old lady. It gets weird fast.

Act I: The family arrives at their new home: a creaky community theater/house hybrid run by Jack's aunt, Alexandra. Cousin Cammie is less than thrilled to share space with a middle-school escapee in crocs and sarcasm. Jack immediately bonds with Abraham, a cinnamon-roll-carrying neighbor with tech skills and mystery theater access. Terrence's spy habits clash hilariously with suburban peace.

Midpoint: While Cammie and Terrence bond awkwardly over pizza, Jack dives headfirst into the basement costume vault and stages an epic solo performance for the ages. Abraham joins the chaos. Terrence spies on them through hidden cameras—and laughs.

Climax: Jack accidentally triggers the panic room lockdown. Cue: red lights, spy alerts, and a full agency extraction squad. Meanwhile, Cammie and Eddie are mistaken for hostages mid-rom-com tickle fight. It's a full-blown misunderstanding worthy of its own musical.

Tag: Family peace returns with ice cream and roasting Uncle Terrence's high school nicknames. Jack recaps the day like it's a reality show teaser. Freeze-frame. End credits.

Main Characters:

- Jack Roberts (14): Chaotic good, hyper-verbal, and theatrical to a fault. Equal parts stage kid and spy thriller protagonist (in his own head).
 - Uncle Terrence (35): Jack's hyper-paranoid legal guardian and ex-intelligence officer. Overprepared for everything except emotions and teenagers.
 - Cammie (15): Jack's quick-witted cousin who'd rather TikTok her way to stardom than deal with a drama gremlin in her theater-turned-house.
 - Alexandra (40s): Jack's warm, pragmatic aunt and the glue of the household. Has big dreams for reviving the old family theater.
 - Abraham (14): Cinnamon roll dealer, neighbor, and walking tech support. Nerdy, sweet, and a budding ride-or-die for Jack's antics.
-

Season One Arc:

Jack slowly transforms from self-involved misfit to local legend through accidental heroics, impromptu theater revivals, and surviving spy-grade mishaps. Terrence learns to loosen up. Cammie learns to trust. And the theater? It just might come back to life, ghosts and all.

Visual Style & Tone:

- Whip-smart dialogue meets physical comedy
 - Warm, color-rich palette with bursts of spy-thriller lighting during "missions"
 - Musical cues and dramatized fantasy cutaways (Jack's inner world is always extra)
 - Think: Kim Possible energy with The Goldbergs family messiness
-

Franchise Potential:

- Weekly Hijinks: "Theater Ghost Hunters," "Middle School Spy School," "Operation: First Dance"
- Spin-Offable Characters: Abraham and his family bakery, Cammie's social media ventures, Terrence's old missions
- Musical Episodes / TikTok Tie-Ins / Holiday Specials