

HOT MESS EXPRESS

Logline

When a perfectionist Black supermom finally snaps, she and her two equally stressed friends escape to a bizarre backwoods B&B run by an eccentric Southern belle. What begins as a wellness retreat spirals into a whirlwind of physical disasters, cultural collisions, and late-night confessions, forcing them to confront their fears, rediscover themselves, and break several pieces of furniture in the process.

Summary

Kendra Taylor's life looks perfect from the outside, color-coded, alphabetized, and running with military precision. But when her husband ruins her great-grandmother's cast-iron skillet and she accidentally detonates a confetti cannon at the school auction, her carefully curated world collapses.

Dragging along Shauna, her razor-tongued divorce-attorney best friend and Lilly, her spiritual but accident-prone ex-sister-in-law, Kendra flees to a suspiciously cheap "wellness retreat." They arrive at The Monroe House, a Southern Gothic B&B run by the gloriously unhinged Beverly "Bev" Monroe, whose décor includes taxidermied animals in tiny hats and whose kombucha probably violates federal law.

Over one disastrous weekend, mud masks made from red clay, autocorrect panic attacks, hypothermic skinny-dipping, and a karaoke meltdown witnessed by two panicked husbands, the women's emotional armor cracks. The chaos forces each of them to face the truth: Kendra's obsession with perfection is strangling her joy; Shauna is terrified of being alone; Lilly has lost her artistic voice. Bev, moving through disaster like a Southern prophet in a caftan, guides them with tough love, weird wisdom, and a toolbox.

By the time they head home, they're bruised, bonded, and transformed. Life is still messy but now they're laughing about it.

Tone & Style

A raucous, heart-forward dramedy with Girls Trip-level physical comedy and the warm, eccentric charm of Steel Magnolias and Schitt's Creek. Stylish, colorful storytelling that leans into Southern Gothic whimsy, absurdity, and female friendship.

Core Characters

- Kendra Taylor — Type-A supermom unraveling under the weight of perfection.

- Shauna Bell — High-powered attorney who cross-examines everyone, including strangers.
 - Lilly Chase — Essential-oil fairy who unintentionally causes 80% of the story's disasters.
 - Beverly "Bev" Monroe — The chaos-embracing B&B owner who becomes their unlikely guide.
 - Travis Turner — The handsome handyman who stays zen despite the madness.
-

Why It Sells

- Female-led, multi-generational ensemble with wide audience appeal.
 - Physical comedy + emotional depth = strong trailer, strong word-of-mouth.
 - Southern setting with colorful, comedic world-building perfect for Lifetime, Netflix, BET+, OWN, or Amazon.
 - Built-in franchise potential (sequels, holiday specials, limited series adaptation).
 - Universally relatable themes: burnout, reinvention, friendship, imperfection.
-

Final Tagline

Sometimes you have to break a few rules and a few things... to fix yourself.
