

SECOND SKIN

Genre: Supernatural Psychological Horror

Format: Feature Film (100 minutes)

Tone: The Neon Demon meets Get Out, haunting, visceral, and visually hypnotic

Tagline: You're not yourself. You're what it wears.

Logline

When a haunted garment resurfaces at a high-fashion desert photo shoot, a rising Black stylist must unravel its violent past before it mimics and replaces, everyone she loves. Identity is the price. And she's next in line.

Synopsis

Zara Miles, a talented but undervalued wardrobe stylist, joins a remote, high-concept fashion shoot in the New Mexico desert, a dream opportunity to finally be seen. But the star piece she selects is a striking vintage black jacket, carrying something inside it. Something old. Something is watching. Something waiting to be worn.

As cast and crew members begin to glitch, vanish, or echo things they've never said, Zara uncovers the jacket's cursed origin: stolen from a sacred Navajo burial site and imbued with the spirit of an ancient mimicry entity. It doesn't steal souls—it waits until you surrender them. Through reflections that lag, doubles that smile too early, and haunting fragments of memory, Zara must confront the forces that have erased her for years, on runways, in mirrors, and in her own mind.

But survival isn't enough. To defeat the mimic, Zara must stop hiding, reclaim her voice, and make the thing wear her.

Why It Sells

- Fresh, high-concept horror led by a dynamic Black female protagonist
 - Visually arresting blend of fashion, folklore, and fear
 - Taps into market demand for elevated genre films (e.g. Hereditary, It Follows)
 - Explores identity, beauty, cultural theft, and performance with razor-sharp metaphor
 - Scalable for both festival acclaim and streamer appeal
-

Comparable Films

The Neon Demon, Under the Skin, Get Out, It Follows, The Babadook
