

THE GHOSTMAKER

Genre: Psychological Thriller / Espionage

Format: Feature Film (120 pages)

Tone: Neo-noir with elements of identity horror, existential dread, and action-driven tension

Rating: R (for violence, language, and disturbing thematic material)

Created by: Kelly R. Tenney / NCCA Entertainment

Logline

A disgraced CIA operative who specializes in erasing people from history discovers her own identity was a fabrication, volunteered by the man who once loved her. Now hunted by the agency she helped build, she must dismantle the ghostmaking program or be rewritten forever.

Overview

Maya Chen, code name The Ghostmaker, was once the agency's most valuable asset, an elite identity eraser trusted to fabricate new lives, rewrite histories, and vanish targets in plain sight. But when a mission ends in the deaths of 47 civilians, Maya becomes the world's most wanted fugitive and the target of the very tactics she perfected.

What begins as a manhunt unravels into a deeper conspiracy: Maya's entire life, from her childhood memories to her scarred motivations, was artificially implanted. The woman she thought she was never existed. The name "Maya Chen" belonged to someone else. And the man she once trained, her protégé, has become the architect of a terrifying new age: one in which entire populations can be ghostmade, and truth is just a programmable illusion.

Now Maya must choose: surrender to a rewritten past, or forge a new self in the ruins of who she was programmed to be.

Themes & Selling Points

- Identity as Weapon: A female-led twist on the amnesia spy trope, layered with emotional depth and existential stakes.
 - High Concept Meets Emotional Resonance: Combines grounded espionage with speculative psychological horror, asking: What makes a life real?
 - Globally Relevant: Tackles misinformation, AI memory implantation, and institutional control through an emotionally intimate lens.
 - Franchise Potential: Opens the door to sequels, series spinoffs, and anthologies exploring other "ghosts" waking up around the world.
-

Tagline

"You don't disappear by running. You disappear by becoming something they can't track."